UNSAID

Two kites soaring high flying far from each other got their strings entangled in the most unusual way.

*They tried their best to fly away from the knot
and told their hearts, "fear not,
as soon as this is over, we'll fly high."*

*The kites came closer and closer till their eyes locked and breathes became still;
they lost themselves in each other.*

Still they didn't realise - they belonged with one another.

The more they tried to untangle the knot, the more complicated it became.

Time went by and they had to succumb to the feelings that their hearts did already welcome.

*It was like a summer love;
they were not aware of the dangers lurking above.
The peril sought them out sluggishly, making them separate gradually.*

*In the end, no matter how hard they try to get their knots tied,
it was impossible and away from each other they fled,
because some things are better left unsaid.*
